

Further episodes

Choo is in hospital recovering from his gun shot wounds.

Katja is let off as she can't be tried due to loop holes in the law (she hasn't killed anyone and there's no evidence that she's stolen members money because they gave it willingly)

Meanwhile Pavlov has become the revered messiah of the cult. Choo is now being called the Baptist (like John) because he really just ushered in the real messiah. Pavlov comes out with heavenly clangers and Katja keeps him happy with triple espresso's and curly wurly's.

Choo returns to claim his throne but Pavlovs become accustomed to coffee and curly wurly's and ain't giving up anytime soon. A punch up breaks out in the style of 'Home Alone'.

Pavlov, whilst smaller is cunning and resourceful and jumps on Choo's back, bashes him with a plank of wood, pushes him through a window etc...

As the regular day to day nonsense carries out in the cult, news and memes abound of Choo's ridiculous story about being visited by aliens becomes the laughing stock of the nation.

Last episode – the aliens return! Choo is vindicated but the aliens are so unimpressed by the so called 'best of humanity' that Choo has assembled but they take Pavlov anyway because, well, what else are they gonna do?

Finish with final thoughts from Choo, Teal and of course, as always... Mr Faversham – What about my ruddy mother?!